Available on: Many online stores What I think: Apparently, this is the biggest day of the year for holiday packages by mail at the post office. I think the number was something over 130 million customer packages. Amazing? Probably not when you think about all the free shipping deals around. Here's another couple out there. Barnesandnoble.com. Orders $25 at qualifying points up to 12/18. Bloomingdales.com. Not free, but a $5 flat fee to purchase all beauty and perfume items. Drugstore.com. Free shipping on orders of $25 or more through 12/19. Landsend.com free shipping to choose from outerwear, shoes and boots. There is no minimum order. Offer good through today, 12/15. Use promo code: Outerwear, PIN 0008870. Macys.com. Free shipping through today, 12/15. Use promo code: Macysfriend. Kmart.com. Free shipping throughout the site is on orders of $29 or more through today. Free service from store to store is offered by Walmart (and many others). Walmart allows you to order through 12/17 and ensures that the item arrives at the store by Christmas. Here's a tip from AOL Consumer Advisor: go to your favorite online store and enter in delivery updates to see if they have any free shipping offers still available. As for me, I'm not going to go anywhere near the post office today! This content is created and supported by a third party and is imported to this page to help users provide their email addresses. This program is controlled by the CDC. These vessels are checked (unannounced) twice a year and, if necessary, subject to re-examination. Inspections focus on: the vessel's water supply (to determine how water is stored, distributed, protected, and disinfected)The vessel's pools and spa (to ensure proper filtration and disinfection)The vessel's power (to determine how food is protected during storage, preparation and maintenance)The potential for food and water contamination (to determine whether What measures are necessary for the observation)Practice and personal hygiene of the ship's personnel (to make sure of the use of appropriate hygiene practices and cleanliness)General cleanliness and physical condition of the vessel (to ensure the cleanliness and absence of insects and rodents)The vessel ventilation system (to make sure that the air treatment systems are properly maintained and cleaned) Medical institutions of the vessel (to make sure that the appropriate documentation of the observation of the gastrointestinal tract and medical logs) The ship's training programs in common environmental and public health practices (to determine the scope and effectiveness of this give a score on a 100-point scale. To pass the inspection, the ship must score 85 points or higher. If the vessel is not inspected, it will usually be re-examined within 30-45 days. However, if the cause of the failure poses an immediate threat to public health, the VSP may recommend that the vessel not sail. Reports of inspections, evaluations and additional information can be found on the VSP website. The report, called the Green Sheet, can also be viewed on the website, which lists all current inspection points for active vessels in the program. Does a low score mean poor sanitation? As a rule, the lower the score, the lower the level of sanitation. However, a low score does not mean that passengers will suffer gastrointestinal problems or other diseases. Ships are required to maintain a standardized report on gastrointestinal diseases for each cruise, with the number of cases by start date and the total number of passengers and crew affected. If at least 3% or more passengers and/or crew members have gastrointestinal disease on this particular cruise, the VSP may conduct an investigation to determine if the outbreak occurred. How common are gastrointestinal diseases on cruise ships? Given the number of people who enjoy cruises each year, the rate of gastrointestinal illness on cruise ships is very low. In 2006 and 2007, there was an increase in the number of norovirus outbreaks. This occurred at the same time as the emergence of two new types of norovirus, which were identified as responsible for 79% of these outbreaks. Norovirus is a highly contagious gastrointestinal disease spread by contaminated food and contact with an infected object or other people. The CDC reports that it is not clear if the increase in outbreaks is directly related to how these new types of norovirus have been prevalent, their ability to cause disease, or another unknown factor. Delivering things is a necessary evil for most online retailers. As much as people like to buy things cheaper online, they don't like to wait to get them, especially if shipping costs significantly increase the final cost. Small businesses can now offer free shipping, next-day delivery, reduced shipping fares, and so on. However, these features have been around for so long that business owners should not view them as a toe to their customers. Rather, studies have shown that, when possible, free shipping is a necessity for retail sites. It is a useful tool to promote the site, improve customer service and encourage consumers to spend more. Consumers have begun to expect that free shipping will be available on many retail sites. Either as a bonus for buying a certain number of items, or as an automatic function of the site. It's not that what people expect, but they actively seek free shipping when they are looking for sites to shop. According to the latest Accent data, 88 percent of consumers would be more likely to shop online if they were Free shipping. The appeal of free shipping is easy to see. In many cases, shipping costs can significantly increase the final price paid for an item purchased online. If the item costs $25 and the shipping cost is $5, the shipping price has raised the price by 25%. Price-savvy consumers online are looking for ways to save money and as various studies show, people are turning to coupons and free shipping as the fastest way to cut their final costs. This new study echoes a lot of old studies that have shown a shift in customers to sites that have free shipping. For example, Lab42 published data a couple of years ago that found that 96 percent of online consumers are more likely to shop on the site if it offers free shipping. The same study also notes that 87 percent of internet consumers are more likely to shop on the site if it offers free income. Businesses that have free shipping or free profits should make this information known to the public on their website and on their marketing materials. People are more likely to choose a retail site where they are more confident that they won't get stuck paying to return what they don't like, or that shipping costs will suddenly raise the total amount they have to pay for much they've seen. In addition, its impact on site selection, offering free shipping often becomes a deciding factor in how much someone spends and whether or not they make a purchase. A 2013 study by the Compete group found that three out of five (62%) of those surveyed said they would like to see a study of the number of people in the uk. users wouldn't make their latest online purchase unless they got free shipping. Earlier this year, comScore released a study that found that 83 percent of U.S. online shoppers are willing to wait another two days for delivery if shipping is free. Similarly, 58 percent of U.S. online shoppers added items to their shopping carts to qualify for free shipping. These studies show that offering free shipping can lead to more revenue from sales, as people are willing to buy more to get free shipping. If you are focused on price or ease of use, offering free shipping on a retail site comes down to providing good customer service. Research by Boston Consulting Group found that 74 percent of U.S. consumers would cite free shipping as one of the main factors that will improve their online shopping experience. It makes sense when you think about the problem from a customer's perspective. Why pay $10 for shipping when they could spend that $10 to buy the item they want and get both shipped for free. Similarly, if one store offers a 10 percent discount on $40 an item, but is $8 and another store sells the item at full price, but offers free shipping, it is better for the consumer to go to the store where they pay the full price for the goods, but save more because of the free shipping. Oddly enough, there is a slight age difference from whether consumers prefer free shipping to traditional interest discounts. According to studies cited by eMarketer, respondents between the ages of 18 and 45, the preferred percentage discounts on free shipping when making a digital purchase. Older Internet users preferred free shipping above discounts. The dichotomy shows why retailers would be wise to include both options in their holiday marketing campaigns. As the holiday season enters full swing, free shipping becomes even more important for buyers. Make sure to add free shipping options to your retail site and make this information known to your customers.
